The question arose, who is the greater.

The question arose, who is the greatest tero the world has ever known, and the decision was that of all heroes, the great Son of God, Jesus Christ, was by far the greatest; he did what he believed was Son of God, Jesus Christ, was by far the greatest; he did what he believed was His Father's will rjegardless of consequences, even to the death on the cross. Following was the summling up of what men thought were elements in heroism:

To see the right; to do the right; to stand for the right even though you stand alone, when the crowd is against you. To be honest and fall, rather than be dishonest and succeed. To be willing to do the distasteful things if duty calls for it. To think of others rather han one's self. Emphasis was placed on the thought that the only way one could measure up to this high ideal of heroism was to follow the leadership of Jesus Christ.
